

THOMAS J. WERMERS

Sculptor

ARTIST STATEMENT

Thomas Wermers' sculpture is collected by international patrons in the United States, Japan, Israel and Canada.

His sculpture employs a traditional reductive carving technique that retains his love of classical design while integrating geometric compositions with distinctly organic, sensual forms. Wermers uses multiple drawings and maquettes to perfect works characterized by a lack of extraneous detail, ones which emphasize the natural texture and beauty of his materials. Most importantly, he infuses the raw materials with a sense of movement, mass, and a primitive vitality that conveys monumental emotion.

Inspiration for Wermers' art is never ending. Ideas flow from the shapes, shadows and forms found in every day life, especially nature; the body is also a constant motif. Rather than representing anything specific, Wermers' forms suggest images, emotions and memories, which he hopes will inspire the viewer to further artistic awareness.

“The hard work of carving or creating a sculpture is successful when stone, steel and other materials become a sensuous, moving and beautiful form that appears to be created more by the forces of nature, than by man.” Thomas Wermers
